WHALES
Southern rights, once facing extinction, due to the high demand for its oil and bone, is now a protected species. Although protected, they number less than 10% of their population 50 years ago.
Whales breach frequently and it is thought that this behaviour could be associated either with communication or removal of dead skin and parasites.
Humpbacks are well known for their elaborate song
Whales sometimes raise their heads above the surface to look about them. 'Spyhopping'
The tail of a whale can be seen raised at a 90° angle to the wind and appears to be 'sailing' downwind.
July - october, Southern rights visit the warmer inshore waters of South Africa, in quiet sheltered bays, like Plettenberg Bay, to mate and calve.
A SUPPLY OF CLEAN WATER IS ESSENTIAL FOR ALL LIFE
